About the Journal

Focus and Scope

Praxeology is an open access, online peer reviewed journal in the intersection between health research, educational research, the social sciences and the humanities.

The title Praxeology and the subtitle critical reflexive view, refers to Pierre Bourdieu and a research tradition that has developed in Denmark, Sweden and Norway, based on his theories and methods. Praxeology is an international journal, and accepts articles written in the Scandinavian languages, English or French. While the journal is primarily directed at critical and reflexive analyses of practice in health and/or education, the journal also accepts contributions from other research environments and traditions.

Our main target group is practitioners, educators and researchers within the fields of health and/or education. Praxeology's critical view on practices within these fields and the structures that affect them may be of interest to a number of scholars and professionals. The target group thus includes but is not limited to sociologists, anthropologists, historians, cultural theorists, educationalists, teachers, and health professionals, such as nurses, physiotherapists and medical doctors.

Peer Review Process

Articles should be based on an original empirical analysis and/or on a theoretical or philosophical analysis to be accepted. All articles will be reviewed by two anonymous peers.

Articles may be submitted electronically after registration in the journal's system. The main document must not contain the author's name or other hallmarks that may identify the author.

The article may be rejected if the manuscript does not fulfil the criteria in the Author Guidelines, or if its content is irrelevant for the scope of the journal. The editor may also return manuscripts requiring changes before initiating the peer review process.

Feedback regarding the article will be administered in the journal system. There will also be notifications by email. The author may log into the system to see where in the process the article is. After the review process, the article will either be accepted as it is, accepted with minor revisions, accepted with major revisions or rejected. If the editor asks for a revision, the author will get a deadline for this.

Open Access Policy

This journal provides immediate open access to its content on the principle that making research freely available to the public supports a greater global exchange of knowledge.
